英語S (2) 第9講 ハンドアウト (英語情報が多いスライドのみ)

Scenario: You work at the Tokyo branch of a company. Now you are talking with a manager, Karen Baker, who came from the New York head office for a short business trip. This is her first time in Japan. She asked you where is the best place to visit for weekend sightseeing, and you recommend Kyoto. You say:

DEAR ABBY: A couple of weeks ago, my 17-year-old daughter broke up with "Matt," her boyfriend of a year and seven months. My husband and I are sad because Matt had become a part of our family. We included him in vacations and holidays with us. We also became friends with his parents and shared a couple of holidays with them.

英語S(2) 第9講 ハンドアウト (英語情報が多いスライドのみ)

I have not communicated with them since the breakup, and I feel horrible. I'm not sure what's proper etiquette in this situation. Should I reach out to Matt's mom or just leave it alone? I don't have hard feelings toward them, but then again, my daughter broke up with Matt and not vice versa. Let me know what you think.

DEAR BROKEN UP: _____

DEAR BROKEN UP: Young love doesn't always last forever, which can be a good thing. I see no harm in waiting a few more weeks until things cool down and then reaching out to Matt's mother. Tell her you are sorry about the breakup and hope it doesn't spell the end of your relationship with her, which you have very much enjoyed. Her response will tell you if she feels the same.
